...need to engineer a shift in resources towards problems and regions where health outcomes are currently the weakest and where high returns in improved population health can be expected.

The privatisation programme needs to be completed

An important message of the Survey is that wide-ranging structural reforms are needed both for restoring macroeconomic balance and improving ...physicians and pharmacists, and, in the case of the SSK, by restraining expenditures in its own hospitals.

Unemployment protection

The ambitious scope of pension and health coverage contrasts with the lack of social insurance to protect against loss of income due to unemployment. Unemployed individuals receive only severance payments, a minimum level of which is mandated by labour law but is often more generous under collective agreements. If they ...the informal economy up until the age of thirty. The cap on the replacement rate could also be raised to 100 per cent to further reward working beyond the minimum retirement age. Pensions awarded after less than the minimum contribution period, conditional on the minimum retirement age having been reached, should likewise earn the same yearly accrual rate. By...

...taxes from employees and employers are used to pay benefits to current retirees. Perhaps more importantly, the related Medicare (along with private Medicare supplemental insurance) program offers some degree of insurance against the remaining major life expense that individuals face: health care. Medicaid, a program for providing medical care for the poor, is extensively used for nursing home care by the elderly. This is not limited to just the elderly poor, but includes...Providing income for the individual employee in retirement is not the sole concern of pensions. With retirement projected to last from ten to twenty years, health care is also a concern. Many individuals see medicare as a basic, minimum level of service. Supplemental health insurance and long-term care insurance (home health care and nursing home coverage) may be included in ongoing employee benefits packages. Family concerns prior to and during retirement are also important matters. Many... a Herzbergian dissatisfier (Barber, Dunham, & Formisano, 1992).

The motivational value of extrinsic rewards can be enhanced by incorporating intrinsic recognition and growth aspects into these awards. By turning a tangible reward into a special prize, it takes on added trophy value. As a trophy, a clock or television set constantly reminds the individual and others of...
